THE IDEAL SOLDIER.

Inwardness of Bravery on Battlefield.

Archibaid Forbes in the Fortnightly Receive: Well, what is the need of describing the ideal soldier, seeing that, because of fallen human nature, he is all but an impossibility? But as the marauding "Yank" philosophically remarked to Gen. Sherman: "You can't expect all the cardinal virtues, uncle, for $13 a month." No, but you can get a good many of the simpler martial virtues for less money. There is not much subtlety about the ordinary run of martial virtues. My own belief, founded on some experience of divers of all nationalities in wartime, is that most men are naturally cowards. I have the fullest belief in the force of the colonel's retort on his major. "Colonnel," said the major, in a hot fire. "you are afraid: I see you tremble!" "Yes, sir." replied the colonel, "and if you were as afraid as I am you would run away!" I do think three out of four men would run away if they dared. There are doubtless some men whom nature has constituted so the colonel seems as not to know fear, and, who, therefore, deserve no credit for their course.

some men whom mature has constituted so obtuse as not to know fear, and, who, therefore, deserve no credit for their courage; and there are others with nerves so first the search bank of the party. The madness of blood does get into men's heads, no doubt. I have the firmest conviction that in cold blood the mass of us would prefer the air quiet rather than whistling with bullets. Most men are like the colored to the dialogue—they display bravery because in the presence of their comrades and of the danger they are too great cowards to evince politronery. Thus the average man made a capital soldier in the old shoulder-to-shoulder days. British yokels, British jail-birds, German handicraftsmen, German bauers, French peasants and French artisans were all pretty much alike made

Treatment of Cancer, For twenty years I have suffered from a cancer on the side of my neck, near the shoulder, and exhausted the whole catalogue of remedies without any relief. The cancer frowing worse all the time, the whole upper part of my body became stiff and full of pain. I had virtually lost the use of both arms, my general health had broken down, and I saw it was only a question of time when life itself would be destroyed. In this condition I commenced the use of byid's Specific. The first bottle relieved ine of the stiffness in the neck, the second gave me perfect use of my arms, and I feel strong and well in every way. I am a poor man, but I would not take $3000 for the good I have experienced with Swift's Specific. I believe it will force out all the poison and cure me.
